City of Dreadful Delight is not as it would appear at first glance simply a history of Late Victorian London or the crimes of Jack the Ripper. Instead it is a post structuralist analysis of the time, when feminism would have it, that narratives of sexual danger and female victim hood arose in modern urban society.

LONDON INTERNATIONAL SUMMER PROGRAMME

In a very forthright and comprehensive "Introduction", Judith Walkowitz asserts that while the City of Dreadful Delight "observes many conventions of . . . social history" and in parts deviates from "a traditional historical narrative to convey the dynamics of metropolitan life as a series of multiple and simultaneous cultural contests and exchanges across a wide social spectrum", it also emphasizes "the narrative challenges raised by the new agenda of cultural history".
