Symposium Introduction. "Political secularism," Saba Mahmood tells us in the opening pages of Religious Difference in a Secular Age, "is not merely the principle of state neutrality or the separation of church and state. It also entails the reordering and remaking of religious life and interconfessional relations in accord with specific norms, themselves foreign to the life of the religions and people it organizes" (20-21).

Secular vs. Religious Responses to COVID-19 | Psychology Today

Religious Difference in a Secular Age tracks the modern career of political secularism in Egypt through the institutionalization of five of its signature ideas: political and civil rights, religious liberty, minority rights, public order, and the legal distinction between public and private. This kind of work is, by necessity, recursive in that any attempt to track the Egyptian history of a secular concept or institution requires tracing the hegemonic footprints of European secularism.
